New Look Show
Wednesday 10:00 PM

A group of 20 models, all women with long dark hair, are posed on a black and white striped staircase. They are wearing a variety of dresses in different colors and styles, including green, yellow, blue, red, black, and white. The dresses range from short and fitted to long and flowing. The background is a dark, solid color. At the bottom of the image, the words "SUMMER" and "COLLECTION" are written in large, bold, stylized letters, with "SUMMER" in red and "COLLECTION" in white.

THE STORY:
There was a point, sometime in the early 2000s, when cupcakes made the transition from a dessert to the dessert. No one is quite sure how it happened, or when, exactly—these things are difficult to track with accuracy—but it had something to do with the slowing of the economy and the rising of Magnolia Bakery, with the continued ascendancy of gendered foods and the sudden influence

About Us

Always able to spot the proverbial needle in a haystack and sort the valuable from the junk, I have spent years combing Tokyo flea markets, better known as shrine sales, for treasures each week for clients around the world. Porcelain, textiles, woodblock prints, baskets, vintage fishing floats, and katagami stencils are just some of the finds that have come my way. Here in Dubai the discoveries will be different, but I am already finding textiles, trim, carpets and inlaid furniture. And there is nothing I like better than researching an object's a modern-day use for it to share readers. I also write Provenance columns usually once at Chats & Kind which offers a scholarly nod to the history of iconic styles in textile & design.
